

Barb Taub

Author and amazing lady

In halcyon days BC (before children), Barb Taub wrote a humour column for several Midwest newspapers. With the arrival of Child #4, she veered toward the dark side (an HR career). Following a daring daytime escape to England, she's lived in a medieval castle , a hobbit house, and a magical Scottish isle with her prince-of-a-guy and the World's Most Spoiled AussieDog. Barb is amazed that she's just published her sixth book, despite still struggling to communicate with her neighbours and translate from American to English.

As she says;

What Americans call soccer, British call football. What Americans call football, British call incomprehensible. And what Americans call a three day match where often nobody wins and where players might wear a box (athletic cup) to protect their goolies (family jewels) in case someone bowls a wild googly (god knows...), British revere as cricket.!

<https://barbtaub.com/about/>

- Arransound.com

- Has had the great pleasure of serialising Barb's books;
- 'Life Begins When The Kids Leave Home and The Dog Dies'
- 'Do Not Wash Hands In Plates'

- As one reviewer says on her

- “Anecdotes that beg to be read. You could read it in one go (has anyone ever actually died laughing?) or keep dipping in and out. It lends itself to either. But whichever you choose, eating and/or drinking while reading is not advised, as several people have found to their (and their appliances’) costs.” — CathyR for Between The Lines Book Reviews

Barb is a great supporter of arransound.com and we are delighted to have her as a contributor, subscriber, sponsor and supporter of our community radio station, a truly amazing lady and a special friend.